ABSTRACT

This resource guide explains the differences between shareware and public domain computer software programs. Over 90 sources that make these programs available are listed, including organization name, address, telephone number, general costs, and computer types. Several sources that specialize in special education software or adaptive software are indicated. (JDD)

Donna Heiner, Director of the Living and Learning Resource Centre, and Emily Brook, of PAM/LLRC, have compiled for you this listing of free or almost free computer software programs. We hope you discover a few special treasures.

PUBLIC DOMAIN AND SHAREWARE PROGRAMS

An LLRC Fact Sheet

The cost of acquiring a computer system is only an initial expense. The software necessary to make the computer useful to an individual, especially to someone operating on a limited budget, adds an additional expense. The specialized peripherals or software required by an individual with a physical impairment increase the total cost of the system.

Because of the high cost of commercially-produced software, many individuals have turned to the vast array of free or almost-free software available. Described as public domain, freeware, shareware, or user-supported, this software varies in quality from simple games to computer programs which perform much the same as their costly counterparts.

Shareware (freeware, user-supported) programs may be copywritten, but the owner has given others permission to share them. In most cases, the owner requests voluntary payment of a small fee if you use the program on a regular basis. The fee you pay to the author usually entitles you to the latest version of the software, limited support, and complete documentation. Shareware is an alternative distribution system which allows you to use and evaluate a program at no risk. Shareware tends to be of better quality than public domain, some program documentation may be included in the disk, and (if you pay the fee) telephone support does exist. Much shareware is nearly comparable to that available commercially; in fact, some shareware products are not duplicated in the commercial market.

Public domain software is not the same as shareware. The term "public domain" means that there is no limit on distribution; you can legally copy and distribute the program to others. Public domain may or may not be copywritten. An ower may copywrite (and legally own) a program and permit others to give it away. Public domain software has little or no documentation. If you can't figure it out, or if it doesn't work correctly, there is no support. Source code is usually included, so that users can modify programs for their own needs.

How do you find these programs? These are some of the most common sources:

- ✓ Other users
- ✓ Computer clubs or SIGS ("Special Interest Groups")
- ✓ Computer magazines or books (usually for personal use only; an individual cannot distribute copies to non-subscribers without written permission from the publisher)
- ✓ Electronic bulletin boards (can be expensive)
- ✓ On-line information services
- ✓ Clearinghouses

Following is a listing of sources for shareware or public domain software. The LLRC is building a library of software which educators and others may copy. If you have a program you would like to share, please send it to the LLRC. We will replace your disk and make the program available to others.

THANK YOU TO THE MICHIGAN SCHOOL FOR THE BLIND STAFF AND ADMINISTRATION FOR THEIR COOPERATION THROUGHOUT OUR YEARS TOGETHER.

OUTSTANDING VOLUNTEER

Our gratitude and appreciation are "awarded" to JERRY DICKSON, a special friend and volunteer at the LLRC. Jerry has been a blessing, when called upon to help "fix" equipment or "solve" a problem. With all of our requests, he is certainly a good sport. We look forward to having Jerry's friendly face as well as his computer skills with us in the future.

From parents of children with physical handicaps throughout the state and from the LLRC, THANK YOU for grants which made possible our Software Lending Library:

ENABLING TECHNOLOGY EQUIPMENT EXCHANGE
Available at the LLRC

What is the Enabling Technology Equipment Exchange?

The Exchange acts as a clearinghouse between individuals who wish to buy, sell, borrow, or loan used adaptive equipment for individuals with disabilities. The Exchange matches sellers or loaners of high technology equipment with buyers or borrowers.

What types of equipment are available from the Exchange?

Suggested devices for listing in the Exchange include: augmentative communication devices, environmental control systems, switch-operated toys, alternate computer input/output hardware, computer systems which include or accommodate adaptations for physical impairments, closed circuit televisions, or other adapted equipment.

How do I use the Exchange?

There is no charge to participate in the Exchange. To enter your request in the LLRC Enabling Technology Equipment Exchange, please fill out the Referral Form on the back of this page and return to Living and Learning Resource Centre, 601 W. Maple Street, Lansing, MI 48906. Information forms will remain active for six months.
